January | Integrity and Priorities

Elementary

Maci Maddox is a wonderful student to have in class. She possesses many qualities that make her a student of high integrity. She is always willing to lend a helping hand, strives to do her best all the time, and treats everyone with respect and value. I can always count on Maci to do the right thing all the time. She has a very caring heart, and will always do the right thing even if it's a hard decision. She is a pleasure to have in class.

Zoey McElfresh goes above and beyond to help her typical peers and teachers. In class she is always prepared and works hard to get good grades. If another student is behind on an assignment she is the first person to offer help. Zoey is kind, considerate and wants to please not only her teachers but her peers. I am so proud of her effort in and out of the classroom!

Richard Tully is a very good student in school and always has his work turned in on time. He puts effort into his schoolwork and has very good grades. Recently Richard had the opportunity to do extra credit even though he did not need to do the extra work, he chose to anyway and bumped his grade even higher. He said he wanted to have that "cushion" in case he didn't do well on a future test. This shows determination and that he really has his priorities in order.

Katlin Loudon is an excellent example of prioritizing and integrity. She has had an injury and had a lot of physical therapy and has always prioritized all of her classes during her absenteeism. She started communicating with me about her class responsibilities before her trimester had even started modeling to me that she has an understanding of balancing her priorities.

Autumn Sanders is a great role model for Priority and Integrity. I have witnessed this in sports, with her family, and as a student. Autumn knows her priorities and stays focused. She is a wonderful student, always a team player, and makes her friends and family a priority. Autumn's mother has been battling cancer this year, and I know she has designated her mom and the time she spends with her as a priority. Autumn also displays integrity at all times. She has strong morals and is honest. She is a true role model for her peers.

Jackson Whisman is very conscientious with his classwork and takes ownership of his jobs in the classroom. He is attentive to details and always does the right thing. I was impressed when we moved seats and he asked to stay because he was in charge of the paper passing routine. I love that he wants to be helpful and make a difference in the classroom.
