Students and families who choose virtual should have to meet certain criteria (grades & attendance) in order to access virtual instruction.

I do not feel the virtual learning option was rigorous enough for online students. I think we will see a decline in online students learning progressions for the 2021-22 school year. The teachers were bogged down with on-site and online learning materials and I feel the online students were definitely at a disadvantage during the process. They did not receive as much one-on-one instruction or assistance throughout the year.

Only students that are in good academic standing should be allowed to take virtual classes. Their grades should be monitored closely and should be approved to continue virtual learning each 9 weeks. Virtual learning should not be an option for students having below a "C" average.

This virtual learning experience has been great. Good experience for college courses in the future. Should make them more comfortable with the transition. Has been a Godsend thru this pandemic. We are thankful and appreciative for the experience and efforts.

assignment that was turned in but the teacher was not able to see on his end. This has happen to both of my children as far as the teacher not being able to see it. Anyway, he recieved a zero because when the teacher made a personal comment on the assignment a notification was not sent. Since my son did the assignment he did not realize there was a complication. By the time we realized it was a zero the teacher would not let him show that he had done the assignment. It seems that the private comment is not effective. An email needs to be sent in place or the issue with no notifications should be addressed. I do appreciate the teachers. They have taken on a lot more than they usually do.

Virtual learning should be offered when on site learning is not an option, but otherwise Virtual Learning has not been successful for the majority of CRSD students.

If the student is in good academic standing then I do think it should be an option if requested by quarter only. The ones that are not doing work should be on campus.

Students who do not do their work should not be allowed to be virtual. Meals should not be delivered, but they can pick up meals at the school.
