

Proficiency & Technology:

Increasing Student Engagement in the World Language Classroom

Moving toward language proficiency is harder than it sounds but it's what students expect when they show up in your world language classroom. Obviously, there is more to it than 1:1 devices, more than going "textbook-free", and more than just using the target language 90% or more of the time with students.

On September 19, plan to spend the day building units of study for your students on topics of your choice. During this workshop you will learn how to move students toward speaking more in class voluntarily. You also will practice with great tech tools for lesson organization, proficiency practice, assessment and more.

At the end of the day, you will leave with activity ideas for the next day, the next month and the next school year! You will know that you've got what it takes to get your students to speak more without losing time with your class!

Presenter Jill Woerner, formerly the World Language and Global Learning Specialist at the Indiana Department of Education, has returned to the classroom to lead from the classroom. She's a seasoned, practicing world language teacher who understands the everyday challenges in the classroom and has been honing her skills to make sure they work with students of varying ages and in a variety of environments. She'll share her units, her ideas, and her experiences to ensure that all participants leave with something that will engage their students in the classroom!
