Choosing YOUR photographer

Fall beauty is nearly upon us, and most families take advantage of the pretty leaves, cooler weather and impending Christmas card season as the perfect reason to update the family photo. If you don't have a favorite photographer and are looking for someone to perfectly capture your family, there are a few things to look for and keep in mind as you search for YOUR photographer.

1. What's your style? Do you prefer photos that are more dark & moody or light & airy? There are many photographers out there and we all have a certain style that we gravitate towards. Check out their Facebook page, Instagram feed and website if they have one to see what style you can expect from them. Finding one that aligns with what you like is the first step to finding your perfect match.
2. What do you want to do with your photos? Will you be using these for Christmas cards, wall art, or do you just want a few prints for grandparents? Knowing your end goal helps to be able to know which photographer can serve you the best. Some photographers hand over all the digital files for you to print from, while others provide you with prints, wall art, cards, etc and digital files you can share online. Ask yourself which one you'd prefer.

3. What does each photographer have to offer? Giving out all the digital files is increasingly popular, but it's good to ask yourself if that's what you really want. Just being handed the digital files seems convenient, but it also means that you have to do all the work of finding a good place to print your lovely photos and mess with making & ordering your Christmas cards all on your own. Plus, I know sometimes when we just get the digital files, we can tend to put off getting our photos printed, ending up with nothing tangible to show for our investment. This is a busy season for a lot of us parents, and the service that some photographers offer by providing prints is so helpful & ensures that your photos will be printed (which is the whole point of having them taken in the first place, right?).

Whichever type of photographer you choose, make sure your photos get printed and in your hands. Don't let your lovely family photographs live on your computer. Get them out and up on your walls!

Also, make sure you take the time to document your family this year - even if it's just with a quick phone photo! Our families change every year and we need to have photos to look back on & remember how little our kids were just a few years ago. I hope this helps guide you to the perfect photographer for YOU!
