Principal's Message

Good afternoon Cossitt,

While not overtly sharing this TED talk specifically related to our long holiday weekend, I was genuinely struck by its message to want to share. The topic itself (Why Autism Is Often Missed In Women And Girls) was immediately intriguing enough to want to spend 13 minutes with the speaker. While previously having been made aware of the gender differential when it comes to ADHD diagnoses, I had not ever run across this particular theme.

Regardless of how, if at all, we all chose to reflect and celebrate this past weekend, the enduring message within this talk truly resonated with me. Above and beyond the data points and percentages she included, it was hard to miss one of the true underlying messages of her talk . . . the stress and difficulties of what she referred to as “masking”. In so many ways big and small, that speaks volumes to what might truly be one of our culture's greatest hidden barriers.

This exceptionally brave young woman and her heartfelt conversation with her audience very much reminds us of the importance of being attentive enough, caring enough, and listening enough with those in our lives.

The fewer masks we have clouding our eyes and our smiles, the clearer and cleaner our destination would appear to slowly take shape.

Sincerely,

Mr. Michael Michowski
