

BARNEVELD SCHOOL DISTRICT

WELLNESS

The health and wellness of our children is a national concern that requires attention from many different stakeholders, including government, industry, local communities, and families, but schools also play an essential role since they are so influential in people's lives from a very young age and for many years. Therefore it is important that school leaders have policies, guidelines, and standards that support efforts to provide opportunities for healthy eating and ample physical education, role models for healthy choices, and education so that students learn to make healthy choices for their own lives.

The Barneveld School district recognizes the link between good nutrition, adequate physical activity, and academic success. The wellness policy in accordance with the federal law under Section 204 of the Healthy, Hunger-Free Kids Act of 2010.
