Fairfield City School District receives 'C' on state report card

Fairfield, AL – Fairfield City Schools received an overall score of 75 on the Alabama State Department of Education 2019 report card. The District interprets that as progress. Despite multiple circumstances that could have become setbacks from the previous school year, Fairfield City Schools maintains its C status. Superintendent, Dr. Regina Thompson, says the District is proud of its growth. “Overall, we’re excited as a District. We are moving forward,” says Thompson. “The key is to stay focused on student needs and overall achievement in the District.”

Last year, there were ongoing teacher vacancies at Glen Oaks Elementary School, high numbers of student transiency, and an interim principal at the high school. Fairfield City Schools serves roughly 17-hundred students, many of whom are from low income families. Dr. Thompson says the District and the students rose to the challenges and moved forward anyway.

“I always tell my team to trust the process of school improvement,” she says. “It was about building trust. People had to learn to trust each other and trust the leadership.” Thompson credits the success to new behavior plans for students, building relationships with parents, and adding new academic tools.
