Dear Parents and Guardians,

Today, our hearts are heavy as we mourn with the entire country over the loss of 21 lives in the Robb Elementary School shooting in Uvalde Texas. Please keep the families in your thoughts as they mourn the loss of their loved ones.

I understand that such a tragedy can result in fear, anxiety, and depression among members of our school family. We have counselors from Children First in the district to support our staff and students.

In addition, to further the goal of the Willingboro Police Department to partner and collaborate with the district to support our family members, a police officer has been stationed at each of our schools today to monitor the school grounds. This police presence is a show of support for our family as we face many emotions in relation to this tragedy.

The American Flags across the country will fly at half staff today through sunset on May 28, 2022.

I want to share with you some tips from the National Association of School Psychologists for helping your children cope with news such as this.

1. Reassure children that they are safe. Emphasize that schools are very safe. Validate their feelings. Explain that all feelings are okay when a tragedy occurs. Let children talk about their feelings, help put them into perspective, and assist them in expressing these feelings appropriately.
2. Make time to talk. Let their questions be your guide as to how much information to provide. Be patient. Children and youth do not always talk about their feelings readily.
3. Keep your explanations developmentally appropriate.

- Early elementary school children need brief, simple information that should be balanced with reassurances that their school and homes are safe and that adults are there to protect them.

- Upper elementary and intermediate school children will be more vocal in asking questions about whether they truly are safe and what is being done at their school. They may need assistance separating reality from fantasy. Discuss efforts of school and community leaders to provide safe schools.

• Middle school and high school students will have strong and varying opinions about the causes of violence in schools and society. They will share concrete suggestions about how to make school safer and how to prevent tragedies in society. Emphasize the role that students have in maintaining safe schools by following school safety guidelines, communicating any personal safety concerns to school administrators, and accessing support for emotional needs.

4. Review safety procedures. This should include procedures and safeguards at school and at home. Help children identify at least one adult at school and in the community to whom they go if they feel threatened or at risk.
5. Observe children's emotional state. Some children may not express their concerns verbally. Changes in behavior, appetite, and sleep patterns can indicate a child's level of anxiety or discomfort. In most children, these symptoms will ease with reassurance and time. However, some children may be at risk for more intense reactions. Children who have had a past traumatic experience or personal loss, suffer from depression or other mental illness, or with special needs may be at greater risk for severe reactions than others. Seek the help of a mental health professional if you are at all concerned.
6. Limit television viewing of these events. Limit television viewing and be aware if the television is on in common areas. Developmentally inappropriate information can cause anxiety or confusion, particularly in young children. Adults also need to be mindful of the content of conversations that they have with each other in front of children, even teenagers, and limit their exposure to vengeful, hateful, and angry comments that might be misunderstood.
7. Maintain a normal routine. Keeping to a regular schedule can be reassuring and promote physical health. Ensure that children get plenty of sleep, regular meals, and exercise. Encourage them to keep up with their schoolwork and extracurricular activities but don't push them if they seem overwhelmed.

As a community, we are troubled by events like what occurred in Texas. However, during times such as this, we can remind our children that, as the adults in their lives, we will do everything we can to keep them safe. We take this time to remind them that they are loved, valued, and supported.

We remain hopeful for an end to tragedies such as this.

Sincerely,
Dr. Neely Hackett
