Competing priorities

To prevent the erosion of emotional and academic growth, especially in vulnerable children for whom school can be a lifeline, educators in the U.S. urgently need imaginative strategies that go beyond quirky hats and four-foot-square boxes. When children do return, K–12 schools and child-care programs should be guided by four core principles: knowledge of child development and all its variation; prioritization of the youngest and most vulnerable students; flexibility for families and teaching staff; and a shared sense of purpose and duty.

More competing priorities

- Health & wellness of individuals and the community
- Providing children with a quality & equitable learning opportunities
- Childcare & supervision needs, especially for working families
- The mental and emotional health of students from backgrounds and family circumstances
- Budget cuts, economic recession
- Masks all day vs. maintaining social distancing
- There is no one “perfect solution” for all students

It takes a village
