Today, more than 16 million kids are at risk of hunger and they are at an even higher risk when school is not in session. A problem of this magnitude underscores the moral and ethical dilemma our society faces with this growing problem and requires the need to respond with care and commitment to justice.

Most children rejoice when the school bell rings at the end of the day. For families that rely on school breakfast and school lunch, providing healthy food at the end of the school day adds additional stress to tight family budgets.

The At-Risk Afterschool Meals Programs connects children with the free healthy food they need in a safe, supervised location. For many kids, this is their only opportunity to access a healthy meal after the school day ends. Afterschool meals sites offer fun learning and recreational activities so kids and teens can eat a healthy meal while staying active with their friends.
