Remember When… "Rosie the Riveter"

Columnist Carl Sweeney Reprinted Issue #30, 2010

America has always been a country that honors it's soldiers, and well it should. We honor them on Veterans Day, Memorial day, again on the Fourth of July and when we celebrate our independence as a country, which was brought about by fighting for freedom from a dominating country. It is good that we especially honor those who have given their lives for our country over the years, those who died of foreign soil.

There is one group, however, that we do not give enough recognition, and they are the women, and the role they have played in all those endeavors. There were those who were not in the military, but have made a tremendous contribution nonetheless. They supported the effort in 1776, and again during the terrible war between the States, making uniforms, flags and a host of other equipment and supplies. Also during those times, most people were on farms and the women took over and tended to the livestock and the crops.

All of this was never more evident than during World War II when most of the men were in the service. They built planes, tanks, guns, ammunition and a myriad of other products for the war effort. This was in addition to maintaining the home, helping children with their loved ones overseas. They did many other jobs besides factory work. They were in factories during World war II. She came to be called "Rosie the Riveter!"

There have been several "Rosies," and it is a toss-up as to which one should be the lone representative. The first one was "Rosie the Riveter," 1939-1941. She was a model. Two of her photos were; on e was of her treading on a book written by Adolph Hitler and the other was a women fueling a plane. She dies January 15, 2009 at the age of 85. The oldest living "Rosie" at the time.

Another "Rosie the Riveter" came to light when Redd Evans and John J. Loeb write the song in 1942. the song was recorded by numerous artist including Kay Kyser. The song portrays Rosie as a tireless assembly line worker helping with the war efforts, it goes as follows:

All the day long

Whether rain and shine

She's part of the assembly line

She's making history,

Working for victory

Rosie the Riveter.

There was another that many people consider the real, "Rosie the Riveter." She was rose Will Monroe, born in Kentucky in 1920, and moved to Michigan during the war to work as a riveter at the Willow run Aircraft Factory building B-29s and b-24 bombers. She piloted a plane at age 50. A flying accident contributed to her death 19 years later.

The ladies at first started at 50 cents an hour, and almost never during the war received more that $50 a week. However, the men where only making an average of 454.50 a week. I guess that was when they were getting more than women, and we are still fussing about this.

"Rosie the Riveter's" motto was "We can Do It!" In some places, the workers were taken to the factories in what the called, "Liberty Buses." Gasoline was rationed, and not everyone owned a car.

There are lots of museums, monuments and other things honoring, "Rosie the Riveter" over the nation. There are also lots of books and other printed materials about her, but it doesn't seem to be advertised enough. There were several "Rosie" pictures. One of the most popular was by Norman Rockwell in the May 29, 1943, Saturday Evening Post. The actress Ann Southern worked one day in a defense plan to prepare for her movie, "Swing Shift Maizie," in 1943. And let's not forget, "Wendy the Welder." She worked in the shipyards where more welding that riveting was done.

I wonder how many of you remember Jane Withers as "Josephine the Plumber" in a T.V. series in the 1960's. The sponsor was Comet Cleanser. The series lasted into the seventies and the character was based on the original "Rosie the Riveter" and owes much to the exemplary women's efforts in the traditional work place. So folks, when we honor those who helped win the wat let us not forget "Rosie the Riveter."
