January | Restraint, Intrinsic Value, Friendship, and Integrity

Elementary

Gabriella Roy is a respectful student who shows great restraint in class. She is a great role model of restraint for her peers. Gabriella follows the classroom and school rules. She is an absolute joy to have in class.

Holden Sweet comes to school ready to learn. He is always making the right choice, even when those around him are not. He is honest, respectful, and always willing to lend a helping hand to teachers as well as other students. Holden meets the expectations without being asked. Holden is an all-around great student who shows integrity every day.

Spencer Wainscott is an amazing friend. He shows loyalty and honesty as a friend on a daily basis. Spencer treats every person with kindness and respect. He provides our class with a sense of calmness and compassion, and our classroom family would not be complete without him.

Thatcher Wallace is always doing what is asked of him and is very conscientious about everything he does. He is always kind to his peers and is willing to help anyone if they need it. Thatcher is the kind of student every teacher would love to have in their classroom!

Jr. High / High

Mackenzie Bridges has the restraint to stay focused on her goals. She works a part time job and still is constantly keeping up on her scholarships and college applications. Her time management skills prove she has restraint to resist being lazy and keep her goals in sight.

Clayton Caldwell is a joy to have in class and he is always looking for the why behind the lesson. He is a truly curious learner and pushes all students to be better for all the right reasons. He loves to learn and build upon the skills and principles of his education.

James Houchin has an internal drive to learn and push himself to be more knowledgeable each day. He strives to resolve all curiosities with assistance or additional research on his own time.

Lizzie Meranda offers positive friendship to all around her. Making sure everyone is having a good day and asking all how they are. She takes others under her wing and makes sure they have a sense of belonging.
